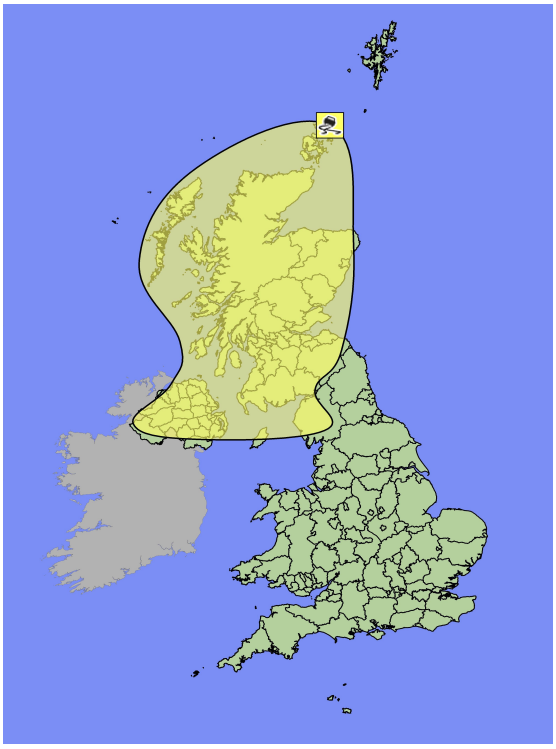
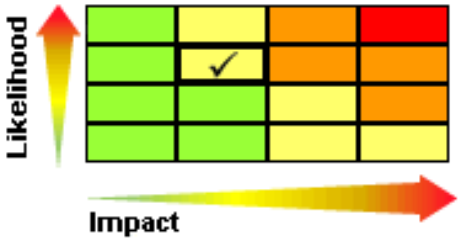
National Severe Weather Warning Service





Chief Forecasters Assessment
An active cold front will bring heavy rain in from the west later on Wednesday and introduce a colder air mass across the whole area by Thursday morning. Road surface temperatures are expected to fall quite quickly to its rear, with ice forming readily. Showers following into some western areas also pose a threat of ice where they leave surfaces wet.

The Met Office have issued a Yellow Warning of Ice

Valid from 00:05 on Thu, 26th Jan 2012 until 11:00 on Thu, 26th Jan 2012

Icy stretches are expected to form on untreated surfaces as the rain clears away eastwards during Wednesday night and into Thursday morning. Wintry showers will follow to parts of Northern Ireland, Southwest Scotland and Northern England with temporary slight slush deposits to lower levels. The public should be aware of possible travel disruption.
